

UNMC/NHS anthrax scare was false alarm

Linda Sedjro

More than 100 pieces of mail received by a physician at the University Medical Associates Clinic at Nebraska Health Service Clarkson West have been tested for anthrax after a recent scare.

On Oct. 25, the Office of Safety and Security at UNMC/NHS was informed of a suspicious routing label found at the facility. It fell out as a physician at the clinic was going through mail.

The routing label was not found inside an envelope or package, and investigators determined the routing label did not come through campus mail.

The label measured about one inch by three inches and had the cities of Trenton, N.J., and Denver printed on it.

Also, a granular-like substance was found on the desk of the physician who handled the mail.

Safety and security officials were immediately called to the scene.

They took precautionary measures to secure the facility, including shutting down the ventilation system in part of the building.

They also reviewed potential exposure risks with employees and shared an article from the Center for Disease Control explaining potential risks.

The Omaha Fire Hazmat team also was sent to the site to bag the routing label and other pieces of mail that were in contact with it so the materials could be tested for anthrax.

All preliminary results have come back negative.

Mary Bennie, manager of printing and mail services for UNMC, said that routing labels are used by the U.S. Postal Service when sending bundles of mail between cities.

She said they are usually placed on top of bundles of mail and held in place with rubber bands or string.

"It is not unusual for these routing labels to come loose and wind up in the bottom of mail bins, where they can collect dust and particles from other pieces of mail," she said.

In response to the negative results, Steven Hinrichs, M.D., director of the laboratory, said, "I am pleased with how this incident was handled and the responsible way our employees reacted and followed the correct procedures that have been established."

He also congratulated the police, fire, safety and government officials who quickly reported to the site.

"Their professional handling of the matter was most appreciated," Hinrichs said.

Even though all results came out negative, Hinrichs still believes such an incident could happen again in the future.

"Given the unsettled climate that now exists in our country and the public ongoing sensitivity for possible bioterrorism acts, it's probable that there will be more instances like this in the future." ☐

A war supporter clad in fatigues was arrested by police Friday evening after demonstrating atop the rock fountain in Durham Plaza for more than two hours.

Officers with the Omaha Police Department took 60-year-old James P. Wainscoat of Viborg, S.D., into custody at 5:20 p.m. Friday.

Eyewitnesses said Wainscoat had scaled the fountain, in the southeast corner of the university's Durham Plaza, at about 3:00 p.m. and taken off his black jumpsuit, revealing white and black fatigues.

Campus security officers, in addition to police who arrived at 4:30 p.m., attempted to coax Wainscoat down from the fountain, but he refused, saying that he planned to hold his demonstration until 6:00 p.m.

During the demonstration, Wainscoat called himself a "Vietnam vet" and said he was demonstrating "for the guys that are on the ground in Afghanistan."

"In the '60s, campuses were alive with protests like this, but mostly from the left," Wainscoat said during his demonstration. "It amazes me that the students here are quiet. It really makes me wonder ... If you go on campuses today, it's like nothing ever

Soccer takes second straight NCC title, denied NCAA bid

Paul Freeland

UNO women's soccer won its second straight North Central Conference tournament title Sunday, but for the second straight season, the Mavericks were denied a spot in the NCAA Division II tournament.

UNO defeated Northern Colorado 1-0 in the first round and followed the win with a 2-1 triple overtime victory over top seed and host Minnesota State-Mankato. The NCAA tournament selection committee, though, awarded the central region's three tournament bids to Truman State, Winona State and Northern Colorado.

Northern Colorado and UNO faced off in the first round. Sophomore Brandy McSorley scored what would be the game's only goal in the 62nd minute, taking sophomore Jessica Dotson's through-ball and slotting it past the Bears' keeper. UNC squandered a golden chance to draw even 10 seconds from time when Kiha Thomas missed a sitter while standing wide open at UNO's back post.

Maverick head coach Klosterman said the Mavericks made adjustments to their formation to slow down the Bears' attack, but ended up returning to their usual formation.

"We did not play as well as we expected in the first half," Klosterman said. "We started out playing three at the back with five in midfield to cut off UNC's wing play, but that gave us too many other problems. When we went back to our 4-3-3 in the second half, though, things went much better."

Minnesota State-Mankato faced UNO in the NCC title game for the second straight year. MSM's Sarah

New NU policy raises question: Will UNO students fight in war?

Josh Bieber

University of Nebraska students are protected under a new policy if they are called to serve their country in the armed forces.

University president L. Dennis Smith signed a presidential memorandum stating, "Students who are called into military service will not lose course credit or tuition and fees. Students whose education is interrupted to serve ... should not suffer either financial loss or loss of course credit."

The policy mainly affects members of the reserves, but draftees ineligible for deferment are also covered.

If students are called to active duty, they have a variety of options, including refunds of tuition and fees or course credit, depending on the individual case.

The military policy was announced by the assistant vice president for external affairs at the University of Nebraska and has been effective since Oct. 17. The policy encompasses all four NU system campuses.

This policy has raised many questions: Why was this policy created now? Do other colleges have such policies? How was this policy arrived at? Will UNO students be called to fight in Afghanistan?

The NU External Affairs office declined to offer answers to these questions.

Major Preister, public affairs officer for the Omaha Army ROTC office, confirmed that some units containing college students have been activated. A student from Bellevue University now works in security at Omaha's Eppley Airport.

Preister said, "It appears that some aspects of the policy may need to be implemented."

He did not say when the policy could be put into effect at UNO.

Both Iowa Western and Metropolitan community colleges have policies similar to that of the NU system's.

Iowa Western's policy was created after the Gulf War, according to Roger Utman, Dean of Student Support Services.

Metro's policy was created for Metro's students at Offutt Air Force Base, said Arlene Jordan of Student Services at Metro.

Bob Reed of UNL's office of Records and Registration said policies concerning students who withdraw from classes are usually made in two parts.

First, members of the faculty vote on when students are allowed to drop classes and still receive credit.

Secondly, the vice chancellor's office of business affairs and finance and the Board of Regents decides on a schedule for the refund of tuition and fees.

This new change of policy circumvented all three groups, coming from the president himself.

The policy was made and put into effect in an expeditious manner, most likely due to the current national situation.

UNO students hope the reason for the implementation of this policy was one of caution, not of necessity, and that they will remain in Omaha, attending classes. ☺

Great Southern land

Mike Machian

In the time of our grandfathers (shortly before the time of our grandmothers), large parts of South Omaha were a European paradise. Many Italian, Irish, Czech and Polish immigrants lived there in their own close communities. There were many people here who spoke more Czech or Polish than English. Many churches were devoted to the ethnic groups that lived in the surrounding neighborhood. This explains how two Catholic churches, St. Mary's (for the Irish) and Sts. Peter and Paul (for the Croats) were built only blocks from each other.

In the grocer's, you could get various ethnic foods like sausages stuffed with kinds of animal meat you thought were not edible. If you wanted to rent a hall, you could always go to the Polish hall at 25th and L Streets.

If people wanted to bowl in southeast Omaha, all they had to do was go down to the prestigious Leisure Lanes or to Sky Lanes in the respectable Center Mall. There were many jobs available in the stockyards and meat packing plants.

Through the years, the winds of change have brought about a new reality.

Now, in the time of us, the European culture that once ruled the south side has given way to a south-of-the-border culture. If you drive down 24th Street you are more likely to see stores with Spanish names than Slavic ones. The Polish home is now the new home of the Latino museum. There are many, many people who speak Spanish while trying to learn English.

On top of that, what was Leisure Lanes is a strip mall and a gas station. The Center Mall no longer has Sky Lanes or many other stores. Even the public access TV studio located there is moving to West Omaha (along with all the real malls). Although most of the stockyards and meat packing plants have closed, their smells still linger to remind us of our past.

Being someone of mixed Eastern European descent, what is my take on all this? I love Mexican food.

Stay tuned Friday for Robert Tisdell's review of Midtown ☺

Smoking and Pregnancy

A study just completed by researchers at the Institute of Health Sciences at Oxford University suggests smoking by women delays pregnancy.

Scientists conducted the study on 569 women who were trying to get pregnant. Those women in the study group who smoked while attempting to conceive took two months longer to do so than those who were non-smokers or those who had quit smoking for a year.

In addition to the information on delayed conception, the researchers also concluded that "the risks of smoking during pregnancy include higher infant mortality, increased risk of the baby developing serious respiratory infections and lower birth weights."

The findings were published in the Journal of Biosocial Science.

False Positive Pregnancy Tests

A report in the November issue of Obstetrics & Gynecology warns of the possibility of false-positive hCG pregnancy blood tests. Two cases were discussed in which two women falsely tested positive for elevated levels of hCG.

High amounts of hCG may indicate pregnancy, ectopic pregnancy or a rare form of cancer. There have been reported cases where women with elevated levels of hCG underwent gynecologic surgery or chemotherapy treatments unnecessarily due to false positives.

Women who produce a high hCG blood result should have a urine test ordered to double-check the diagnosis.

New Contraceptive Patch Tested

Also reported in the November issue of Obstetrics & Gynecology: a new, effective and safe contraceptive patch that works for one week.

The Ortho EVRA/EVRA patch was tested on 1,672 women who wore the patch for three weeks, then were off the patch for one week. George W. Creasy, M.D., said the probability of pregnancy for women on the patch was 0.7 percent.

Side effects included site reaction, nausea, moodiness, headache and breast discomfort.

May the force of e-mail be with you

Nikki Strayer

Religion n. 1. Belief in and worship of a superhuman controlling power. (Oxford Dictionary of the English Language.)

Does "Jedi Knight" fall neatly under this category or does the fictional title leave a little to be desired? According to over 10,000 British citizens, "Jedi" is most certainly a religion worth recognizing, and better still, worth printing as an option on next year's national census.

It all began with an e-mail campaign, which convinced more than 10,000 Star Wars fans to list George Lucas' fictional title Jedi Knight as their official religion on the British 2001 census. The participants held true to their word, and when the time came, Jedi was the religion of choice. So many people were into this idea, in fact, the Office for National Statistics was forced to give Jedi its own code. This means that the British will be seeing Jedi again soon, only this time in print. How serious these people are about their supposed religion, we do not know.

After asking students around campus, it was found that even those students who have managed to somehow avoid the Star Wars films altogether have heard the words "Jedi" and "religion" in the same sentence and concluded that something is not quite right.

"That's everybody's choice, but it seems ridiculous to me," UNO sophomore Jamie Evers says. Indeed.

UNO sophomore Zach Zaiss has his own opinions on the topic.

"I just think it's good they can be so open and willing to accept this as a religion," Zaiss says. "I just hope this gives way to a wider religious tolerance and allows me to practice my own personal religion: Monetary Donationism, that is GIVE ME YOUR MONEY!"

Zaiss has faith this newfound British acceptance will encourage the U.S. to be more accepting of its own wide diversity of religions, including smaller ones like his own.

Perhaps one can find deeper insight into this religious occurrence with the help of a religious professor. After all, that is what they do.

I sat down for a chat with Ron Burke of UNO's religion department in hopes he could shed some light on this seemingly lost situation.

"[New religions] combine a new sense of freedom with a sense of the powers within," Burke says. He also adds that these new religions stem from "a desire for personal religion, as opposed to organized religion." This in turn is leading to an increasing popularity of new religions.

After much thought and discussion, Burke concludes the Jedi Knight may be most effectively compared to either the Japanese Shinto religion or the Wicca religion. Shinto is an ancient, indigenous Japanese religion meaning "the way of the spirits" and Wicca is a newer revival of the Pagan belief system, which focuses on the energy in nature and all things. Both of these religions are centered on the acceptance of a natural energy and, above all, keeping a natural balance or harmony in all things. Wicca also incorporates a harnessing of this energy for use in healing.

Can you see the parallels? It is somewhat outrageous to think that something so seemingly fictional can actually be so closely tied in with a number of other religions around the world. So next time you hear that some fanatic is claiming a fictional idea as a religion, look closer — it may actually fit the definition. And as for the noble order of Jedi Knights — it looks like Lucas did his homework. ☺

Enron supports diversity in the classroom

Aisha DaCosta

Have you ever gone to a teacher with a problem and received a useless reply? They just could not relate or did not bother to care. What do they know about life in the 'hood? They probably live in a little house on the prairie — and so, once again, you leave misunderstood. Many minority students across the nation have probably felt this way at least once in their lives.

And so the rally cry goes out — more minority teachers!

On Oct. 5, UNO Chancellor Nancy Belck announced the establishment of the College of Education's latest effort to increase the number of minority teachers in public schools. The Omaha office of Enron has committed $32,000 to the University of Nebraska Foundation in order to attract more minority students to the teaching field.

According to Omaha Public Schools, 10 percent of OPS teachers during the 2000-01 academic year were minorities — meaning African American, Asian American, Hispanic American, and Native American. This is in contrast to the 48 percent of district students who fit into this minority group. This problem is not just local; educators in public schools across the nation are faced with a continuous disparity between the proportion of minority teachers to students.

At UNO, the College of Education has also been fighting an uphill battle to increase the representation of minority teachers in the public school system. The fight began in 1985 with the Minority Internship Program. Since then, other valiant efforts have been made to address this serious issue. In 1992, the MacAllister Scholars in Education Program was established to attract more minority students to the field of teaching. Since its inception, the MacAllister Scholarship has provided support to 71 students studying various levels of teaching.

"The Enron and MacAllister scholarships provide the college with the opportunity to attract outstanding individuals to the field of teaching, which is vital to quality public education," says John Christensen, dean of UNO's College of Education.

The Enron Scholarship is an outgrowth of the MacAllister Scholarship. One of the provisions of the MacAllister Scholarship is that university officials seek out other supporters in the community to join in the struggle of minority teacher recruiting. When educators approached the Enron Corporation, a worldwide energy, commodity, and service company, for support, the company eagerly agreed to donate funds and establish a scholarship program at UNO.

The Enron Scholarship was launched this past August and provides $2,000 per year for up to four years to deserving minority candidates who have excelled in academics, leadership, community service, and are seeking teacher preparation. Enron scholars volunteer for 20 hours per semester at the Hope Center in North Omaha, which serves the community by providing after-school study, tutoring programs,

CD reviews

reviews by Kelsey Archer

The O'Jays
For The Love...
MCA Records

Locked in musical history, the O'Jays release the first hit for the new millennium, For The Love, which features 10 songs that create feeling filled with love.

The trio stands shoulder to shoulder in the contributions that ensured the completion of the band's new CD. All three members contributed to the conception, writing and producing of nearly all the material featured on the album. Eddie Levert, Walter Williams and Eric Grant have at least 40 years' experience creating music together.

Songs such as "Let's Ride," the first single released off the album, roll out with the ease and power that The O'Jays have established as their trademark sound. Other songs featured on this CD add spark and color to the music industry. The O'Jays let it all out using rhythm, repetition and many different vocal techniques to create soulful sounds.

Unlike the O'Jays' past recordings, For The Love releases many suppressed inner musical urges that have been simmering within the group. The emotions are strong and truly express the title because all the lyrics and musical sounds are for the love.

Boney James
Ride
Warner Bros.

Multi-talented saxophonist, keyboardist, producer and songwriter Boney James creates an intensely edgy and funky nine-track album.

This urban-flavored music is created by using different elements of music and the talents of this successful instrumentalist. Adding to the contemporary music scene, Ride adds a strong style that is carried throughout the album.

Track such as "RPM" create a drive that keeps the listener entertained and willing to continue listening to the Latin and house rhythms. Other songs leave with a smooth peaceful feeling, like "So Beautiful."

In general this disc has an overwhelming synthesis of street funk, sensual R&B, and contemporary jazz sounds that take you on a serious trip.

Kottonmouth Kings
Hidden Slash II
Capitol

The Kottonmouth Kings released the newest crop early in October. Hidden Slash II is the band's long-awaited third full-length studio album.

Kottonmouth Kings' newest CD has a sound that is truly second to none. The band's raw, aggressive attitude is clearly expressed in the lyrics and musical composition.

The opening track, "Killa Kali," establishes a strong sense of what the following 15 tracks will feature. The Kottonmouth Kings create a fresh hip-hop/punk rock/reggae sound that is sure to ignite the underground nation.

Hidden Slash II follows up the May release of Dopeumentary, a 60-minute historical DVD and VHS presentation of video clips, live footage and many other special treats.

Orange County, Calif.'s Kottonmouth Kings will continue to amuse and entertain during their tour with D12, which began Oct. 6 and will continue through Nov. 21. B

Your favorite pair of shoes

Cosmic bowling, oh yeah

column by Holly Lukasiewicz

Bowling can be a good time, don't get me wrong. Add some flashing, colorful lights, a disco ball and some "Who Let The Dogs Out?" and you've got yourself one fabulous night of cosmic bowling. But this doesn't even touch the obstacles one may encounter while pursuing this cosmic ideal.

For instance, there is the encounter with Rick, the bowling shoe man. We all have our favorite pair of shoes. It just seems second nature to hand our shoes over to the bowling shoe man, who in turn presents us with a marvelous pair of slick suede bowling shoes. But the question is, should we really trust this guy? I mean, really, who knows what Rick does with our lonely shoe while he stands behind the counter. And does he really sanitize the bowling shoe you have just slipped on your foot?

Basically, the deduction is Rick equals the guy with greasy hair who gets this twisted power trip from bossing 15-year-olds around. A real charmer.

The next encounter of the evening could very well be the die-hard Husker fans who like to "raise the roof" after each ball is tossed down the lane, whether the ball even hits pins. It is times like these that make you appreciate innocent enthusiasm at it's finest.

And who could forget the gourmet bowling alley food? It's like people eat nachos and chicken drumettes as if they were going out of style. And we all know that's not quite true, so what's all the fuss anyway?

A cool person once said bowling alleys are kept company by their very own subculture of beings, one characterized by a huge generation gap. That is the thing that makes people who bowl so special — special because we have all been a part of it at some point, and probably enjoyed it when we did.

Cosmic bowling brings all ages together with one

Domestic Disturbance is more than disturbing

review by Matthew Burkey

Ugh. Again. I missed Buff and Roswell (which did a nice little crossover.) It makes even The Beach look good. Okay, well I guess it's not that bad.

John Travolta plays Frank Morrison, a devoted father who will do anything to protect his family. Matthew O'Leary plays his son, Danny, who has had some problems in the past with getting into trouble and telling the truth. Gee, I bet no one saw that plot twist coming.

Vince Vaughn plays Rick Barnes, the stepfather who is not all he seems. Again, I wouldn't have guessed that one in a million years. Teri Polo plays Danny's mother and the new Mrs. Barnes.

The story goes along, and Danny witnesses Rick disposing of a body. Soon, Danny is telling his father and mother, but they both dismiss it as a ploy by Danny to break up his mom and his new stepfather.

But very soon Travolta becomes suspicious, and begins to think Danny may be right. Well, from then on out you get the picture. He has to protect his family from a homicidal maniac.

I just have a few questions for Travolta and Vaughn ... Why? For the love of all that is holy and pure, why did you agree to do this film? Now, O'Leary I can see; he's only 14 years old and hasn't done many movies. But you two ... why?

Despite the bad plot and even worse dialogue, both Vaughn and Travolta did a commendable job taking on their roles. They did their best ... but not even their valiant efforts could save it.

O'Leary did a very good job in his role as Danny, a refreshing bit in an otherwise dull and dreary film. Polo also did a good job with the material she had to work with. Her performance wasn't the best, but certainly wasn't the worst I have ever seen either.

The plot lacked imagination, and the script ... well, I honestly think I could write something better while suffering from a massive head wound and bleeding profusely at 2 a.m. in the morning. But that's just my opinion.

John Travolta plays Frank Morrison, a father who will do anything to protect his son from his new stepfather Rick Barnes (Vince Vaughn).

If I were you, I'd wait until this one comes to video, and then only rent it when you are bored out of your skull and can't find anything else to do. I'd even recommend cow tipping before watching this movie. As for the movie: Bad film, no Oscar!

Snoop says: Smizzle lots of pizzle and get hizzle, chizzle

Snoop Dogg visits Omaha on Halloween

Rapper Snoop Dogg played to a packed house at the McCormack's Mac Dome near 140th and L Streets on Halloween. The crowd was an interesting mix of people, some in costumes and some wearing their everyday pimp regalia. Snoop was also promoting his new movie Bones. The concert featured several opening acts, including some local rap and hip-hop acts.

Bird3 flies coop to perform in Omaha

Holly Lukasiewicz

Just when you think the search for a talented new band with amazing sound has reached its peak of frustration, a bird flies overhead and poops on you. But this isn't any regular bird poo; this is the "take-a-sigh-of-relief-because-you've-no-need-to-search-any-further-for-quality-music" sort of stuff. And after listening to the band Bird3, your search can be officially over.

The Los Angeles-based trio of musicians who call themselves Bird3 (the "3" is silent) bring an eclectic range of influences to their music. From The Who to Led Zeppelin, The Beatles, Neil Young and Radiohead, this band is capable of immense music-making talents.

"We kind of give it up," says Bird3 drummer Michael Miley in a recent phone interview. "It's like a friend of ours said, when we're on stage, it's reckless abandonment."

"Our strategy is pretty simple," Miley explains. "Becoming a familiar face, familiar sound, familiar band ... that's the goal of this tour and most of our tours until we sell a million records, and even after we do, because, you know, that's what touring is all about."

"There's such a cold, jaded crowd of people out in L.A.," adds bassist Greg Coates. "The welcome we get in Omaha is amazing ... people are so excited for bands and music. We just like to throw it down."

And throw it down they do.

Here's the trinity of Bird3: The band consists of an Argentina-born lead singer who goes by the moniker Bird. Bird wears wings, has the voice of an angel, has lived all over the world, oozes with energy while performing and will occasionally climb to the top of a stack of amps and speakers and play some mean guitar. Bird's dad is a dam-builder.

Coates is "a bassist without limitations." He has been gigging since he was 15, has designed and built custom instruments, is "the guy who takes care of the bass lines and guitar chords" and has a way with words that remind you they can be fun again. Coates can handle his Red Bull and sushi.

Miley "on drums" knows all The Who songs, will probably tour with them one day, hits with an intensity that vibrates the body, awaits the day he can blast Rachmaninov in their van and has toured with artists like Santana. If you watch close, you can catch Miley pound bare-handed, proving just how amazing and intimate this can be even in a room with over a hundred people.

"We're trying to make good music in a time of

Too far to go at Fargo: Mavs drop 31-22 to Bison

David M. Johnson

Football

Call it the Dome of the Block. The North Dakota State Bison (6-3) blocked UNO's hopes for a perfect season, downing the No. 2 Mavericks 31-22 Saturday at the DakotaDome.

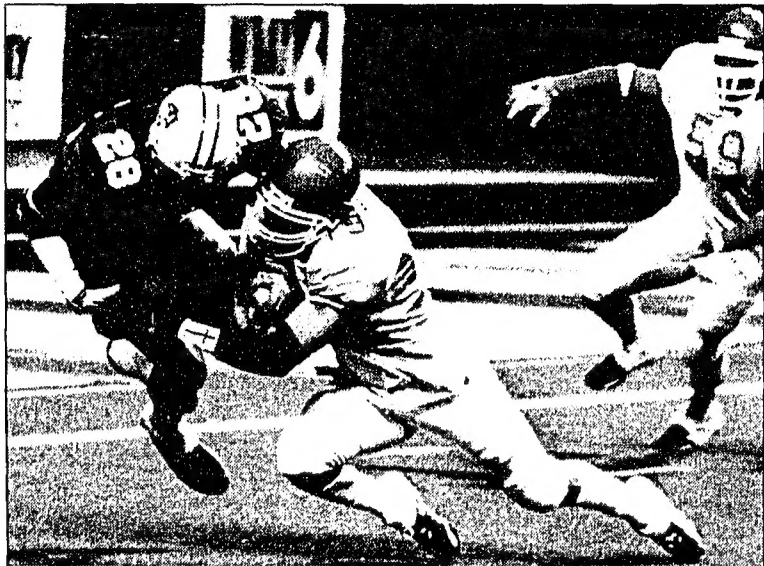

UNO led 9-0 at the half, thanks to a safety and a 2-yard run by James Johnson. NDSU took over from there, scoring 24 unanswered points in the third and fourth quarters.

Sophomore Trey Guidry, subbing for an injured Seth Turman, guided UNO to a pair of late fourth-quarter scores. Guidry cut the margin to 24-15 with a 1-yard plunge, then to 24-22 on a 15-yard pass to Mike Nizzi.

Guidry had one final opportunity to pull the game out of the bag late in the game. UNO took possession of the ball with 4:04 left. From his own 10-yard line, the sophomore backup completed three passes to put the Mavs at midfield.

That was where the attack ended. Guidry's next attempt was picked off by Bison safety Jared Essler, who returned the interception 73 yards for the final score of the game.

Guidry did finish with a career-best day. He completed 11 of 27 passes for 157 yards and a touchdown. Turman paced the Mav running attack, rushing eight times for 51 yards.

UNO held the statistical advantage in all areas of the game, except the final score: 31-22.

The Mavs out-rushed the Bison 146-98, and out-passed them 188-94, and had a 22-12 first-down advantage. UNO held the turnover edge as well, 2-1, but the Mavericks' one turnover was costly.

Coming into the game, UNO (8-1) had won 18-straight regular season games. Now, the Mavericks' last two losses have been to NDSU. The Bison defeated UNO 43-21 in the 2000 NCAA II quarterfinals.

UNO finishes the 2001 regular season next Saturday with a trip to Augustana (4-5). That game kicks off at noon. B

Hockey Splits with Buckeyes

Brian Brashaw

Hockey

Shutouts have not come easy against the Mavericks hockey club thus far in the season, but that's exactly what Ohio State goalie Mike Betz got in the first game of a two-game series against UNO. Betz shut out the Mavs 1-0 on Friday night, but the Mavericks came back to win Saturday 4-1 and earn the split.

Friday's night game was as tight as rush hour traffic with all the collisions of a ten-skater pile-up. The lone goal was scored in the second period by Buckeyes defenseman Thomas Welsh. The power play goal was Welsh's second of the year.

Both goalies stood on their heads the whole game, making a total of 48 saves between them. Betz came out on the winning end, and gave his team two conference points.

The Mavericks came out blazing early in the game Saturday. Greg Zanon swiped a Buckeye defender and sprung Jeff Hoggan for a 2-on-1 with Shane Glover, who zapped it back to Hoggan and in, giving UNO a shorthanded goal, and the lead just 2:30 into the game.

Daymen Bencharski evened the game late in the first by capitalizing on UNO's ability to endure penalties. The power play goal came 18:30 into the first. Dan Ellis then shut the door, and the Buckeyes didn't score again.

The game-winner came early into the second when Greg Zanon slapped the disk past Betz. The Mavericks continued the pressure into the third period. Andrew Wong extended his game scoring streak with a third-period goal. UNO capped the game with an empty net goal by Glover.

Ellis was huge both games. All in all, Ellis stopped 59 of 61 shots, making it possible for UNO to stay in the Friday game all 60 minutes, and keeping stress levels low Saturday.

Maverick penalty killers also played well, holding OSU to two for 10 on the weekend.

The Mavericks are now in sixth place in the conference in early standing, just five points behind Michigan State. Mind you, Michigan State has played eight conference games, while UNO has only played four.

Four more conference points are on the line next weekend, when UNO travels to Western Michigan, currently one point behind the Mavs. B

Geiger on short list for Harlon Hill award

David M. Johnson

Football Feature

Co-captain Chad Geiger is one of the regional finalists for the Harlon Hill Trophy, Division II's answer to the Heisman Trophy.

Geiger was a 2001 pre-season All-American pick by Sports Preview magazine following his selection as North Central Conference Defensive Back of the Year 2000. The senior was also named to first-team All-American squads by Daktronics and the Football Gazette.

He has won the Hutchison Award, given to the UNO player deemed most enthusiastic in the performance of his abilities, and was named UNO Outstanding Back for 1999 and 2000.

In 39 games for UNO, Geiger has made 215 tackles, including six behind the line of scrimmage, intercepted 11 passes and broken up 29 passes. He has recovered two fumbles this season.

Geiger first played on the UNO gridiron in 1998. Since then, he has helped the Mavs to a 35-10 record and three NCAA II playoff games.

Geiger is one of six Midwest Regional finalists. The list will be pared down to two regional finalists Nov. 12. B

Cross Country

The Maverick women's cross country team brought high hopes to the NCAA II Regional Cross Country meet last Saturday. Unfortunately for UNO, seven other schools had placed ahead, and UNO finished 10th. Also unfortunate because the top six teams qualify for the NCAA II National Meet.

Western State University captured the team crown in the region with a team score of 33. Western placed four of the top 10 runners (2nd, 3rd, 4th, 8th) to take top honors.

The individual winner came from Adams State College. Zoila Gomez Solis won the individual title with a 6K time of 21:43.0. Adams State placed second as a team.

The top UNO finisher was Bridget Stephenson, whose time of 23:55.7, was good for 38th. Right behind her was Melissa Hines in 40th.

The team finished with 254 points, which placed them eighth of 23 teams in the meet.

Four North Central Conference teams did place in the top six, qualifying for nationals. North Dakota (3rd), South Dakota (4th), Northern Colorado (5th), and North Dakota State (6th) will all represent the NCC at Nationals.

There were 154 total runners in the women's meet.

On the men's side Western State and Adams College also took first and second, respectively.

UNO Finishers:

Bridget Stephenson	23:55.7	(38th)
Melissa Hines	23:59.7	(40th)
Sara Stricker	24:33.9	(56th)
Michelle Ellingson	24:24.4	(62nd)
Darcy Preston	24:47.3	(63rd)
Molly Miller	25:03.2	(72nd)
Deanne Bailey	26:53.8	(128th)

Shallow Hal

How long can the Farrelly brothers' luck last? This time, they direct Jack Black as a guy who only dates perfect "babes" until he's hypnotized into only seeing a woman's inner beauty. Gwyneth Paltrow plays the horizontally challenged woman whom Black envisions as a perfect beauty.

Heist

David Mamet writes and directs this tale of a thief (Gene Hackman) who has more problems than he can handle with a dishonest fence (Danny DeVito), a troublesome nephew (Sam Rockwell), and a vixenish wife (Rebecca Pidgeon, Mamet's wife).

Amelie

Audrey Tautou has won raves as a Parisian waitress who tries to help others but has trouble realizing what's best for herself. French comedy with subtitles. B

from Soccer, page 1

Cox broke the deadlock 58 seconds into the second half, scoring on a feed from Randi Warhol. Two minutes later, junior Stephanie Kruse levelled the scores with a header off of freshman Molly Herzberg's corner kick.

Neither side would take the lead in regulation time or the first two overtime periods. MSM's Nikki Kiley had a gilt-edged chance to win the title for her team in the third overtime, but her shot from three yards out failed to find the net. McSorley would secure UNO's second straight tournament title in the 129th minute, running onto a Kruse pass and rolling her shot into the corner of the net.

Klosterman was pleased with the tournament results and praised his team for winning in a hostile environment.

"I thought that we were the better team overall throughout the game," Klosterman said. "That was a great finish and I don't think anyone could ask for anything more in a championship game. To win the championship at the other team's home field just makes this all the more magical."

McSorley was named the offensive MVP of the tournament and sophomore goalkeeper Heidi Bargmann was named defensive MVP. UNO finishes at 16-5, but for the second straight year will stay home during the post-season. B
